

EHR Integration Services acknowledged as an initial API Premier Partner in NextGen Healthcare's API Developer Program

EHR Integration Services (EHRis) recently became one of the first companies to be accepted into NextGen Healthcare's rigorous API developer program with two of its leading productivity applications, EHR Barcode Reader and Chart2PDF.

Two of the Company's leading productivity solutions are now pre-certified for the NextGen Enterprise EHR (NGE) Application

EHR Integration Services (EHRis) recently became one of the first companies to be accepted into NextGen Healthcare's rigorous API developer program with two of its leading productivity applications, EHR Barcode Reader and Chart2PDF.

EHRis is proud to receive this designation, as it adds NextGen Healthcare to its extensive list of trusted and valued integration partners. This is also an important development for all the NextGen Enterprise EHR (NGE) clinical and specialty practices, as it offers more options to expand the functionality of their Enterprise application and improve care. By using a trusted API partner such as EHR Integration Services, NextGen clients can now more easily add new applications, seamlessly integrated into their health record environments. "We're pleased EHR Integration Services is among our first API Premier partners," said John Beck, Executive Vice President and Chief Solutions Officer. "In our mission to enable the transformation of ambulatory care, quality productivity apps like those from EHRis offer additional value and choice to NextGen Healthcare clients."

"We're honored to now be a NextGen API Premier Partner. Over the past 12 years, we've listened and worked closely with our clients and integration partners to provide creative solutions that improve patient care and practice administration. With this new partnership, we're committed to offering NextGen clients the same workflow improvements and superior customer service," said Craig Luce, President, EHR Integration Services. EHR Integration Services will publicly introduce its new API Premier Partner designation at the upcoming NextGen Healthcare User Group Meeting (UGM) on November 11-14, 2018 in Nashville, TN. As a preferred partner who can help transform healthcare practices, EHRis' pre-certified API products will be showcased in the UGM Expo Hall at Booth #800. They are also available through the company's website at www.ehrintegration.com and NextGen's Marketplace Application Store.

About EHR Integration Services

EHR Integration Services (EHRis) is a top-rated company for EHR related applications, integration, data migration, EHR conversions, interoperability and interface development between the practitioner and the systems they use every day.
